

MARKET NEWS

LIVESTOCK CONTRIBUTION TO CLIMATE CHANGE: FACTS & FICTION

What we choose to eat, how we move around and how these activities contribute to climate change is receiving a lot of media attention. In this context, greenhouse gas emissions from livestock and transport are often compared, but in a flawed way.

The comparison measures direct emissions from transport against both direct and indirect emissions from livestock.

Greenhouse gas emissions by sector.

Comparing transport and livestock raises another issue. Wealthy consumers, who are rightly concerned about their individual carbon footprint, have options like driving less or choosing low carbon food. However, more than 820 million people are suffering from hunger and even more from nutrient deficiencies. Meat, milk and eggs are much sought after to address malnutrition.

More on source:

<http://news.trust.org/item/20180918083629-d2wf0>

#TOLSAFUNFACT

DO YOU KNOW..

...what's eaten for Christmas dinner around the world?!

When it comes to Christmas dinner, people around the world tuck into all sorts of weird and wonderful festive fare.

You might indulge in mince pies, or perhaps ham is more your style. For others, a holiday meal wouldn't be complete without fried chicken, fruit cake or salted cod. Depending on where you grew up, and where you live now, the seasonal delicacies that grace your table may be sweet, savory, or a little bit of everything in-between.

Christmas goose in Germany

JAPAN: Christmas fried chicken

ITALY: Panettone

ENGLAND: Christmas pudding

MEXICO: Bacalao fish

PHILIPINES: Roast pig

US: Fruitcake

ISRAEL: Latkes

Which Food Will You Try During the Holidays This Year?!

EVENTS

HAPPY BIRTHDAY SSPT: 70TH ANNIVERSARY!!

This months, our Senegalese subsidiary, SSPT, is celebrating their 70th anniversary!

SSPT's team gathered with the local authorities, many of our customers and friends in order to celebrate the special occasion.

We are proud of our colleagues from Senegal who work hard everyday to achieve the company's objectives and ensure our customers satisfaction!

Drawing of the SSPT team

